Bright eyes and dull; near sighted; far sighted; everybody (except those who won't, and they are worse than blind) can see at a glance the advantages gained by using PEARLINE. We do not expect everyone will see it, but millions do, and the number increases every day.

Delicate women and strong, wonder at the amount of work they can do with the aid of PEARLINE—the time saved; the satisfactory results, and when they have used it for years they realize that everything that is washed or cleaned with PEARLINE lasts longer. This is very simple—PEARLINE does away with most of the rubbing—the greatest wear and tear that clothes are subjected to is the repeated rubbings necessary to keep them clean with ordinary soap. Your own interests should lead you to use it, if you do your own work and value your fine linens and flannels; the latter reason should surely convince any bright woman that it is to her interest to see that her servants use it. PEARLINE makes a saving all around.

Beware Peddlers and some unscrupulous grocers are offering imitations which they claim to be Pearline, or "the same as Pearline." IT'S FALSE—they are not. 186 JAMES PYLE, New York.

Steam or Water. Loads of bought for house-heating purposes, for sale.—Some of our "nasty bird" citizens looking their houses and putting to the outside windows.—The activity of the plumbers in putting in large furnaces in place of smaller ones, now seen in our houses and steam and hot water heating apparatus.—The increasing demand for wood and coal, also the ever-increasing sale of thick winter clothing, mittens and gloves. All these things, and our citizens around with their coats buttoned close up to their throats point out to us that one of "our northern winters will soon be with us, and we are warned to see that we are prepared for the rigor of winter.

The other lights are expected to be in working order by to-night. MAINE'S BEST RESOURCES.

Address of Hon. William Freeman, Before the Farmers' National Congress at Council Bluffs, Iowa.

Masterly Presentation of Maine's Resources, Advantages and Business Opportunities.

Below we publish an abstract of the admirable address delivered at the session of the Farmers' National Congress, Council Bluffs, Iowa, August 28, 1890, by Hon. Wm. Freeman, of Cherryfield:

At the last session of this congress held in Montgomery, in 1889, there was placed upon the desks of some of its members, a slip of paper purporting to be printed in Chicago, which among other things informed us that the East—that New England, did not produce upon her farms only sufficient to "last her population seventeen days"—just "seventeen days" and no more. The writer did not state from what source he obtained his knowledge.

It will be my province and pleasure to undeceive those (if any such there are) who entertain such an erroneous opinion of the agricultural products and resources of the East, by facts and figures that will give a better and truer knowledge of her vast productions when taken in the aggregate, and particularly of Maine, which has never been considered an agricultural state.

In order that this congress may act understandingly and wisely, upon all the varied questions, and interests which may, and will, from time to time, be presented for its consideration; it is necessary that it should be made acquainted, so far as practicable, with every agricultural product, and every interest for which it is organized, to promote and protect, in every section of this great Union, however remote, or however adverse or conflicting they may be. Knowing the agricultural needs of every portion of our country, it will be in the power of this united body to aid and afford that protection, by strong and united efforts which representatives from single states could not accomplish.

It should go further, this congress, in order to act intelligently for the interest of agriculture in all its branches, and in every section of our wide, extended territory, should possess a general knowledge of every industry which draws its life blood from it, and what industry, among the tens of thousands that are carried on in this country, is not dependent upon agriculture? It is an industry upon which all others are founded, and without which no other industry could possibly exist. Cripple the hands of the husbandman by revenue laws which bear heavily upon what he produces, and it not only affects him, but all other industries suffer in some degree. If manufactures and other industries languish and are unable to sustain themselves and are forced to suspend operations from whatever cause, the farmer feels a corresponding depression and his business suffers. All trades, business and occupations, are intimately connected with and dependent upon it for prosperity, for advancement, and for protection. But the fact is patent that none of these can live and prosper unless it draws its life from the heart of agriculture.

Agricultural science has made most wonderful progress during the past twenty years. If it requires skill, learning and experience equal to any of the so-called learned professions, why is it not now or has becoming one of the learned professions? Most command more talent or greater judgment and sound common sense to carry it on successfully, and understand its principles. No calling is more honorable, and in its ranks are found many men of great ability and learning, and of national fame.

We do not need to inquire what class of men, properly organized, united and directed, would wield the most political power, and have the most influence in shaping the affairs of this republic, when we consider that two-thirds of the population of the United States are either wholly engaged in agricultural pursuits or indirectly interested in them. If history are engaged of power it behooves our rulers to consult the interests and wishes of that mighty body of men upon whose prosperity and industry we are so dependent not to listen with respectful attention, and to take heed to their interests and reasonable demands.

It is true that there is not so large a proportion of the population in the East engaged in agricultural pursuits as in the far West, or in the South, yet in New England, which is heavily combed with manufacturing and other establishments and industries, where almost every conceivable article which can be made from iron and steel, cotton and wool, from wood, paper, clay and straw, from glass, from gold and silver, and from almost every other metal and thing is wrought, yet her agricultural interests form no insignificant part of her wonderful industries. Even Maine, the extreme eastern State of the Union, which a distinguished gentleman from Ohio had occasion to say was buried up in the mist of the year, and which some believe is only known for its congressional votes, has become noted for some of her agricultural products.

The whole number of farms in New England in 1880 were 297,423. As a rule they were unencumbered and operated by their owners. No capital mortgages were upon them. Of this number Maine had 64,249 farms, valued at $302,287,615; of these 41,835 were cultivated by their owners. About one-third of the acreage of the state is included in her farms. Over one-half of the increase in population between 1870 and 1880 were farmers or agricultural laborers.

New England, and especially Maine, has superior grazing lands and as a consequence superior butter and cheese are manufactured in all of them. The value of the live stock in 1880 was $60,000,027 and in Maine alone $16,000,776. While large quantities of beef are brought into the central States from the West, Maine has annually sent droves of cattle and sheep into Massachusetts and other States for sale. New England produced in 1880, 70,687,255 pounds of butter and cheese. Of this Maine's share was 15,371,496 pounds. About 24 pounds to every inhabitant, including infants.

New England raised in 1880, 4,679,556 tons of hay valued at about $50,287,715. Maine's part of this was 1,187,208 tons, valued at about $12,000,000. She not only raised all that she needed for her own consumption, but found markets for her surplus hay in other states, even as far south as New Orleans, and no better quality of hay can be produced in the world. The East does not boast of its countless flocks of sheep, but the census of 1880 shows a product of 6,935,011 pounds of wool, of which Maine supplied 2,776,407 pounds. It is a small industry compared with many others for which she is noted. The island section of Maine has long been famous among epicures for its superior flavor and quality. The estimated value of farm produce in Maine alone was $21,915,489.

The potatoe crop of New England by the tenth census reached 22,058,069 bushels. Maine's part was 7,039,625 bushels. In one county of Maine, Aroostook, 2,248,594 bushels of potatoes were raised. In 1875 there was but one starch factory in the state. In 1885 there were thirty-two starch factories in the county of Aroostook alone, which consumed 1,750,000 bushels of potatoes making annually 7,400 tons of starch. One factory alone converted 160,000 bushels of potatoes into 500 tons of starch.

Would you expect the ice and rock bound coast of New England to be par excellence a land of fruits and flowers, wild and cultivated? There is no better portion of the United States in which to cultivate most kinds of orchard fruit. New England, and the quality, is equal to almost any other portion of the country, and superior in flavor to same grown in warmer latitudes, which, though of good quality, are chiefly remarkable for their mammoth size and beauty. The value of the orchard product of New England in the fruit decade was $6,355,000. Of this Maine had $1,172,000. This does not include small fruits. While finding markets in other states for her apples, chiefly, she has sent many cargoes across the Atlantic, where they are prized for their good and keeping qualities. Apples are also sent to Massachusetts from Minnesota and other counties.

The small fruits of New England form an important branch of industry to her people. There, perhaps, is not a State in the Union where wild fruits grow more luxuriantly, in greater abundance, or of better quality than in Maine, and they are within the reach of the poorest of the laboring class and are sources of traffic and profit to her citizens.

We call your attention to one small fruit, the blueberry, you may say an insignificant one. We select this because we have never seen any mention made of it as a special industry, and also to illustrate some of the deeds of the East and the workings of our laws. Blueberries are now canned all over the State of Maine. Within a comparative few years it has become one of its important canning industries and factories have been established solely to pack them. In Washington county, the extreme eastern county of Maine, which borders on the St. Croix river and which first receives the light and warmth of the rising sun, 32,000 cases of blueberries of twenty-four cans in a case, were canned in that one county alone in 1888, making 768,000 quarts, and more than twice that number are consumed by the inhabitants and marketed fresh. Those canned are sent all over the country and across the continent and Atlantic ocean. The business is now becoming systematized. Large tracts of blueberry territory, in some instances covering many thousands of acres, are controlled by individuals under lease, who every two or three years renew the crop by the torch, alternately burning a portion of the ground in the early spring when no damage can be done.

But there is a great drawback even to this industry. We are the next door neighbors, as before stated, to the British provinces, and blueberries are canned there and brought into our markets and sold at much less price than it costs our canning establishments to pack them, for the very reason that those who gather them in Maine cannot afford to do so for one cent or one and one-half cents per quart as we are informed is paid in the provinces for the same kind and quality of berry. We pay our people better prices and the consequence was, the pack was cut short the past year because it would not pay, to can the fruit, and thousands of poor people were for a time deprived of their accustomed source of living of a season when they could get no other occupation, and many who packed them lost money because they could not compete with their provincial neighbors. The same causes operate to affect unfavorably other agricultural interests, and other industries in all the eastern states, and particularly in Maine, where her farmers come in competition with her provincial neighbors, and how in their reciprocity treaties with this country she pulled the wool over the eyes of our astute politicians by their superior statesmanship, as they claim, and in Maine they think it was about true.

Maine according to the census of 1880, raised 2,255,375 bushels of oats, 965,714 bushels of wheat, 960,033 bushels of corn; of other grain crops—buckwheat, barley and rye she raised 651,284 bushels. Although she is her grain product does not compare with the western states, her farmers can market all the grain and receive, in price, often three times as much per bushel for what they raise as the record will show. The present census will show a gain in all grains but corn, if we are rightly informed.

Maine has but one county, Aroostook, which can be strictly called an agricultural county. Extending across the northern border of the State, it has an area considerably larger than the State of Massachusetts, possessing a climate and soil adapted to the cultivation of most grain crops. Though her winters are long, and her growing season short, her crops mature rapidly and never fail to yield abundant returns for the care bestowed upon her soil. In 1830 she had a population of only 3,200. In 1880 she had increased in population from 3,200 to 41,700, with a valuation of $21,351,325, and the present census will show a greater increase in wealth and population as well as in farming products.

Maine could supply herself with what she needs from Aroostook county alone, were her resources fully developed, and New England does supply herself almost wholly with garden vegetables; she gathers her chief importance and her wealth and distinction from the vast number of other industries which employ a large proportion of her population, and which enables the former to find a market for his products, and which draws from the great West vast quantities of grain to help sustain them, and from the South the products peculiar to her soil and climate. Among these we point her numerous lumber mills and wonderful variety of articles which are wrought from all kinds of wood, from all kinds of machinery, and cunning devices, born of the fertile brain of the Yankee; her cotton and woolen manufactures which produce the almost innumerable articles of wear, and other things made from them, so essential to our comfort, health, taste and luxury.

Her tanneries, her boot and shoe industries, which bring music from the lap stand; her foundries and machine shops and rail works of all kinds, which is constantly heard the clang of steel.

EPPS'S COCOA

BREAKFAST.

"By a thorough knowledge of the natural laws which govern the operations of digestion and nutrition, and by a careful application of the fine properties of well-selected Cocoa, Mr. Epps has provided our breakfast tables with a delicately flavored beverage which may save us many heavy doctors' bills. It is by the judicious use of such articles of diet that a constitution may be gradually built up until strong enough to resist every tendency to disease. Hundreds of subtle maladies are floating around us ready to attack wherever there is a weak point. We may escape many a fatal shaft by keeping ourselves well fortified with pure blood and a properly nourished frame."—"Civil Service Gazette."

WEDNESDAY, OCTOBER 29, 1890

The Democratic papers in Boston are having a hard time in defending Congressman Andrews' record. The difficulty of the job is manifested in the temper displayed.

It is a singular fact that in the Democratic campaign in Massachusetts the papers are devoting their entire space almost to the Magwump candidates. One would hardly know from an examination of said papers that Congressman O'Neil is a candidate for re-election. It is not to be wondered at that an old line Democrat wants to know when his party intended to make nominations.

Gov. Hill says Maj. McKinley is beaten. All the state, the continent, continues in Quince and velocity.—Boston Herald.

Here is another instance where the free trade editor is contradicted by the news columns of his own paper. A special despatch from New York printed in the Herald Monday said that Gov. Hill declined to make any prediction as to the result of the election in Major McKinley's district. It is a small matter, but it serves the purpose of illustrating the utter unreliability of the Herald's editorial comment.

The Boston Herald thinks it a manifestation of "partisan credulity" to accept the statement of the Boston firm announcing an annual saving to their customers of $50,000 under the new tariff, and says this only covered the goods in their line. The goods to "their line" represent a very important item to the people, but they are we take another line of goods. In the same issue of the Herald there appears an advertisement containing the following announcement:

Thomas J. Gargan said at Tremont Temple last week: "The cost of making a coat such as a workingman wears, will be $3.50 more than it was before the McKinley bill passed." We offer 500 good, substantial workingman's coats, at $3.50 each; 1,000 men's strong, warm overcoats, at $6.50 each.

Here we have another Democratic bulletin. Is it "partisan credulity" to accept these figures printed in big type in the Herald's advertising columns?

The Nickel Ore Resolution.

The Boston Globe publishes a resume of the Chicago News' statement to the effect that the appropriation of $1,000,000 for the purchase by the Secretary of the Navy of nickel plate for armor construction, was the result of a "deal" with the Standard Oil Company which it alleges was behind the bill. The charge is so ridiculously false that it is hardly deserving of serious consideration. The resolution was introduced in the House September 25, by Mr. Boutelle Chairman of the Naval Committee, at the request of Secretary Tracy. It was immediately following the remarkable armor tests at Annapolis, the object being to enable the Secretary of the Navy to secure a supply of nickel to be utilized in the manufacture of armor for our new war ships. The resolution came to the House bearing the unanimous approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs. It could only be taken up and passed by unanimous consent. Mr. Boutelle in a brief speech explained the purpose of the resolution and it passed the House without a single objection, a fact particularly significant as demonstrating the clear appreciation of the importance of the measure because it came before the House right after the memorable contest in which party feeling was at fever heat. The resolution was sent to the Senate and was unanimously reported from the Committee on Naval Affairs. It was called up by Mr. Hale, discussed at some length, went over for a day and then passed without objection. In the discussion the resolution was favored by Mr. Gray, the Democratic Senator from Maryland, who said.

"The nickel which is purchased by the Secretary, I am sure, will be purchased in such fashion and on such terms that there will be no loss to the United States."

The whole matter is left discretionary with the Secretary of the Navy of whom the same Democratic Senator said:

"I think, of all the eminent Secretaries who have preceded the present incumbent of that office, none has better secured the people of the United States of the honesty and integrity and intelligence with which the Department is administered than the present head of the Department, and I for one am perfectly willing to trust him on these exceptional grounds with this discretion in regard to the purchase of nickel."

This in brief is the history of the resolution and the silly twaddle in the Chicago News that the Congress of the United States and the Secretary of the Navy has entered into a "deal" with the Standard Oil Company, of which no one had a thought in connection with the matter until this ridiculous sensation was exploited, will not exercise a feather's weight upon the public mind.

Speaker Reed in the West.

The Chicago Inter-Ocean relates the following incident in connection with Speaker Reed's visit to that city: He came just as plain Tom Reed would have come before he was elevated to the rank of "Czar" by the Democratic editors of the country. He carried his own grip as he left the train and thought it no detriment to his official dignity for other passengers to crowd him in the rush of departure.

As he stood on the platform at the Wisconsin Central Depot he was the best natured and least concerned of the passengers. No one suspected him of being a poor and penniless czar, but no one knew that Mr. Reed had lost his money as he took the train at Waterloo, Iowa, Thursday night. He did not charge it to pickpockets, but regarded the incident as one of those mistakes when a man thinks he puts his money in his vest pocket and drops it.

He discovered the mistake when he met the Pullman conductor and offered to exchange a $5 bill for a berth. He couldn't find any money in his pocket, and a Pullman conductor is not a good man on whom to practice with sight drafts or bank checks. These are not negotiable with the despot who rules over the Pullman section of the railroad train. Mr. Reed realizes this and stood quietly in the car employing both hands in a systematic exploration of his pockets in search of the missing bill. He was not satisfied with once going over the ground. He began with the vest pockets and came back to them several times in succession, and at the beginning of each trip the smile on his face "plained" as he realized that he was in a sleeping car without money.

Reed could even a case for the constitutionality of a protective tariff on occasions like this, and he could put even a Democratic editor weak, for a time, when he had lost his money.

The Speaker of the greatest parliamentary body in the world laughed as he admitted that he found himself in the condition of the man who was offered the State of Texas for a pair of boots, but hadn't the boots.

It was a financial problem that he had not considered in any of his speeches on the tariff and other economic subjects and he admitted that a deficit was more difficult to handle than a surplus. For once he wished himself a Democrat, just to know what to do under the circumstances, as the Democratic party has had experience in deficits and are always growling about the surplus.

An acquaintance who had been watching this little comedy laughed too as he offered to act as banker, and Mr. Reed came to Chicago a penniless czar.

Mr. Reed is an excellent traveler. He does not show the fatigue of his Western tour, which has been one that would be impossible to most men. Three weeks ago he left Maine to visit some of the close districts and help Republicans to return their Congressmen. Through Connecticut, New York and Pennsylvania he made speeches, and last week visited Ohio, where he was to make three speeches in McKinley's district. Instead of three speeches he delivered eight in that district, and last Monday he was billed for a speech at Logansport. Instead of one he delivered two, and Tuesday came into Illinois, beginning at Champaign. Instead of one speech for that day he delivered three, and traveled 300 miles to make them.

He spoke for fifty minutes at Champaign, took a special train for Peoria as soon as the speech was finished, stopped at Bloomington for ten minutes and spoke for Congressman Rowell, and reached Peoria just in time to swallow a bite of supper and be driven to the hall, where he spoke for an hour to Congressman Post's constituents. He retired at midnight and was up at Galesburg Wednesday morning to take the train for Burlington. At Glenwood and Galesburg he stopped and made heavy speeches, reached Burlington at 12, and made a speech in the afternoon and another in the evening.

Thursday morning he had to leave Burlington at 5 o'clock, and while other passengers breakfasted at Cedar Rapids, Speaker Reed was compelled to speak to 1,000 people who had gathered at the depot to see and hear him. He was obliged to eat his breakfast on the train, where it had been taken by the porter, and at the same time entertain the people who continually passed through the car to shake hands and talk with "the foremost man in America." At Waterloo he shook hands with the crowd until ready to attend the meeting, for an hour in the open air, returned to the hotel and again shook hands with people who could not be kept away, and in the evening made two speeches at two big meetings in different parts of the city.

Portable Cooking Range.

FOR WOOD OR COAL.

The Clarion Ranges have been before the public 10 years and they have grown more popular each year until to-day in Maine as the best for all others.

Please read what some of the leading dealers say about this celebrated Range:

Messrs. Dunn & Keeper of Lynn, Mass., say: "We have sold several hundred Clarion Ranges in the past five years and have as yet to find a case where they failed to work satisfactorily. They are splendid bakers. No other Ranges in these parts can hold a candle to it."

The Keller Furnace and Steam Heating Co. of Boston, say: "We have sold between five and five hundred Clarion Ranges to the best people in Boston, who pronounced them to be by far the most economical and quickest baking Range that they ever used."

Messrs. A. L. & E. F. Goss of Lowiston, say: "We have sold at retail of the Clarion, New Clarion, Royal Clarion and Gold Clarion Range, not less than four thousand (4000) and they have always given entire satisfaction."

Another remarkable fact is that the good old Stove of Maine, whose motto is, "We Lead," has produced the best cooking range in the market. Sold in a public way are proud of.

Messrs. Poss & Crockett, of Boston, say: "We sold over seven hundred (700) Clarion Ranges. No other Range can fill its place for the unrivaled conditions. No other Manufacturer has ever made a Range to equal the Clarion, and why has it become known the world over as the best?"

PURCHASING SILVER.

A Statement from Director of the Mint Leach.

Some of the Recent Criticism Answered.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28. E. O. Leach, director of the Mint, makes the following statement in regard to Treasury purchases of silver bullion and the causes of the recent decline in the market price of silver: The Treasury method of purchasing silver has been published in detail, particularly that the large purchases by the Department do not include all silver bought; that the London price is used as a basis for the government purchase; that bids to the government are on the decimal system and tend to favoritism. In regard to the first criticism I may say that the government purchases silver as it does bonds, or indeed any articles required in considerable quantities, by public competition and the lowest offers are always accepted, provided they do not exceed the highest market price. For the benefit of all producers, however, who would otherwise be obliged to trade through middle men, superintendents of the mines are authorized to purchase at a price fixed by the Director of the Mint, corresponding to the market price of silver. These purchases average, weekly, one-half million ounces per month and are reported to the Treasury weekly. It is not true that the London price has been used as a basis for silver purchases under the new law. During the last administration not only was the London price the only price used in making purchases, but the department did not pay the equivalent of the London price but made counter offers to bidders on the theory that the silver was worth less in New York than in London by the cost of transportation and insurance across the water. The present administration has been governed by the New York price and has paid at times an excess of the highest price at which certificates were in that city the same day. The government accepts for the sale of silver, but does not reject a bid for the reason that it exceeds the London price. If there are no lower bids it will accept any bid within the highest New York price. As no time since the passage of the new silver law, indeed for some months before, has the Treasury felt itself limited in acceptance to the London price. In regard to the Government quotation being on the decimal basis one of our critics is ready to say "A suspicious and significant fact in regard to the Government's purchases of late is that houses offering large lots have been under bid by the hundredth part of a cent. The Government's quotations are on a decimal basis which is a great advantage to those who may have advanced information as to the price the Government is willing to pay on a given date." It may be said that the Government has the scale of its own. The difference we whatever scale that

The Lowest Bids

Sets Them Sent.

Any person who has silver may offer it at any price he sees fit. If one hundredth part of a cent lower than another is the government to decline the lower bid because of the decimal? The idea of any bidder having "advance information" as to the price the government will pay is ridiculous and impossible. Offers for the sale of silver are all made by telegraph within a few minutes of 1 o'clock. The treasury has no idea of what it will pay until offers are offered its acceptance being governed solely by the offers. These offers are entered in a book and the offers passed on by the Director of the Mint who recommends what ones be accepted or rejected. The book is then taken to the Secretary of the Treasury, each offer passed on separately and personally by him and the bidders notified by telegraph of the acceptance or rejection of bids.

The Whole Business

does not occupy fifteen minutes. The uniform practice is to accept the lowest bids, the only question for the director and secretary is of formalities being how much they will buy on a given day and how favorable the offers are as compared with the market price. The method of purchasing silver by public competition is the same as has been pursued by the Treasury under all administrations since 1878. The causes for the recent decline in the price of silver are obvious. The visible stock of silver in New York does not sensibly decrease, notwithstanding the purchase by the Government of 12,276,478 ounces since August 13th. This large and undiminished stock is a standing menace to the price of silver and has of itself been sufficient to shake public confidence in silver.

If the Large Western Refinery

had offered their product for sale to the government at current prices and sold the remainder abroad the stock would not have accumulated. In hopes of realizing larger profits they held their silver for months prior to the passage of the new law, or despoiled it in New York for certificates. It was very unfortunate that this stock was allowed to accumulate, especially that certificates were allowed to be issued on it guaranteed by a National Bank and listed on the Stock Exchange to be dealt in on margins as other stocks. In my judgment there should be a law enacted against dealing in money metals on margins. The usual demand for silver for export has almost entirely ceased and large quantities of foreign silver shipped to the United States.

The Imports of Silver

into the United States from May 1 to September 30 of the present year exceeds the exports by $4,923,175; corresponding period last year the exports exceeded the imports by $5,948,990. This accounts for the fact that the stock is not diminished. During the same period the shipment of silver to India has not considerably decreased, although latterly has been slow. The usual amount of the supply for India had been obtained there sooner than the United States. So, too, in regard to the natural movement of silver to China, Japan and the Straits from San Francisco. Not one ounce of silver has been shipped to the Orient from San Francisco since May 1 this year; over $4,000,000 worth was shipped during the same period last year. All sorts of rumors have been telegraphed from London to this country. The purpose and effect of this was to Weaken the Price of Silver.

It is well known that as are in the midst of a most active mining season had undoubtedly be production of silver has been stimulated by the passage of the new silver law. It must be remembered that we are approaching winter when mining is not so active and moreover that the present activity in working the silver mines naturally results in more rapidly exhausting their bodies. Aside from the discoveries of valuable silver bearing properties in Australia, I am not aware of any large deposits of silver discovered within the last year or two; certainly none recently. It is fair to assume that the silver product for any considerable period, unless there are new discoveries, will not be materially increased by the present active working of the mines. The new silver law has been executed by the Treasury Department to the utmost good faith and the same friendly spirit toward silver which characterized the act and manner of its execution have not had the most remote bearing on the recent decline in price.

They Prefer Even Death to a Condition of Serfdom.

LONDON, Oct. 28. The Telegraph's St. Petersburg correspondent says: The Minister of Interior received a telegram containing startling accounts of peasants' revolts in Kharkov and Yekaterinoslav districts in southern Russia.

Nine thousand troops are operating against the peasants in the Bogodookhov district, who refuse to betray their leaders and they declare they will not relapse into serfdom, preferring instead to die fighting. Peasants are prowling about in armed bands firing and pillaging land owners' residences. They have burned 5,000 acres of forests on the river Samara and destroyed immense quantities of corn in Bahmoutsk.

THE LOTTERY EVIL.

A Vigorous Enforcement of the Law.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28. Attorney General Miller has sent a circular letter to all United States Attorneys calling attention to the act of Congress approved Sept. 19, 1890, entitled an act to amend certain sections of the Revised Statutes relating to lotteries and for other purposes, with the suggestion that they carefully examine the statutes and spare no effort to enforce them. He says: Every violation of the lottery by an individual or corporation in the distribution of lottery literature, or in any other way, should be brought to the attention of the grand jury and if indictments found a vigorous prosecution should follow as the end that the nefarious business may be suppressed. The enforcement of this law should be a hearty co-operation on the part of District Attorneys, United States Marshals and Post-office Inspectors. Similar instructions have been sent to United States Marshals.

News About the Capitol.

Lieut Commander Bunce.

WASHINGTON, Oct. 28. Admiral Belknap commanding the Asiatic squadron, reported to the Navy Department by cable this morning the death of Lieut. Commander Tom Pennington. He was attached to the Omaha.

Given a Rebuke.

The Solicitor of the Treasury was given an opinion in reply to the collector's statements presented by section 3 of the customs administrative act, as affected by section 11 of the same act. He says that considering the fact that the intention of the statute was the prevention of frauds on the revenue by the imposition of unreasonable paying advances upon ad valorem duties, and that no such motive appears why the application should extend to the duty paying purely specific items, this section does not require importers to furnish certificates of the cost of the manufacture of goods paying specific rates. The Secretary endorses this conclusion and requested the Secretary of State in case that the consuls thereon to instruct the United States Consular officers to act accordingly.

Foreign Action Ordered.

The Indian Bureau is in receipt of a telegram to the President from Guy Copper, to the effect that bands of Indians are off the reservations in Colorado, indicating game, damaging private property and greatly endangering the peace. By direction of the Secretary of the Interior, Agent Waugh is directed to take immediate steps to return the depredating bands to the reservations. The Secretary of War has given necessary instructions to the local military authorities.

That Terrible Weakness.

Why So Many Women Are Pale, Weak, Tired, Nervous and Exhausted.

Women are great sufferers from nervousness, weakness, nervous prostration and debility. Their minds of ailing drive and begets in the chest, continued nervousness or shape, functions or sufficient, and hundreds of thousands wear out their native force and power in household cares, family bereavements and responsibilities, and work which never ends.

Here lies the great secret upon the nervous system of women. Here is the cause why so many women complain of being weak, nervous, tired and exhausted.

They have little or no rest, their life is one continual round of work. What wonder that such women go to bed at night tired, and wake tired and unrefreshed in the morning! What wonder that they become worn out, so to speak, in nerve and vital power! What wonder that they have great weakness, exhaustion, pain in back and limbs, together with the distressing female complaints which are always caused by loss of vital strength and vigor! Of how many thousands of women is the above a true and exact transcript of daily life! They have worn out and exhausted their nerve force and physical power. They must work, but it follows as surely as the day follows the night, that they must receive from some source a renewal of nerve force and physical energies or the human machine will soon cease to run at all.

The great nerve invigorant and female restorative is Dr. Greene's Nervura. No remedy in the world is so sure to bring back the bloom and color to the pale and ruled cheeks, the brilliancy to the hollow and haggard eyes, the lightness and elasticity to the weak and weary step, the strength and vitality to the unstrung shattered and worn out nerves. It is the greatest of all uterine tonics and regulators and cures all female weaknesses and diseases. It is purely vegetable and harmless and can be procured at any druggist's store of personal

GLAD TIDINGS OF HEALTH.

I wish to say for the benefit of others, that I was taken sick with Heart Disease. I had two eminent physicians, and was under their care for six or eight months, but constantly grew worse. I lost 25 pounds of flesh, and was so weak I could not raise myself in bed, and the doctors said I could never be better. But, hearing of Dr Greene's Nervura, I commenced using it, and in a week I began to feel better. At present, after using it a few months, I am able to walk and ride out, have gained 40 pounds in weight, so that I recommend Dr Greene's Nervura never! my life, for which I feel very grateful. Mrs E. M. Bass, Orford, N. H.

ALL THE VAST RESOURCES.

Her slate and granite quarries which are rapidly increasing and are assuming huge proportions in which Maine is the third State in her State productions and the first in the extent of herbaceous industries, her limestone, lime quarries and the millions of barrels of lime which they annually produce; her sea fisheries which exceed in value and extent all other states, and in which Maine stands second in the roll of states, and first in the importance and value of her river fisheries, her oysters and lobster fisheries and canning establishments, in which Maine stands forth most prominent and at the present time, not only first, but almost alone, and annually packs 30,000,000 cans of sardines and 1,500,000 cans of lobsters, her extensive cod and mackerel fisheries, her enormous trade in fresh, pickled and smoked fish of many kinds, reaching into the millions of boxes.

Her ship-building, in which Maine has annually built a greater tonnage of tonnage than any other state, and the present year will launch upon the bosom of the deep a vastly increased number and tonnage of wooden and iron ships, to bear upon the ocean's breast the products of this great nation.

We cannot omit to mention the ice crop which is peculiar to Maine and has always been a very rich, and which the present year will bring millions of clean cash into that State as a result of a few weeks' laborious but lucrative harvesting this considerably new source of enterprise and wealth.

There should be no antagonism of sections or clashing of interests. The poor and laboring classes should not look upon those whom they think more fortunate than they with envy or hate, nor the rich oppress those they employ. Their interests are one and both classes are dependent upon each other and should act and work for the benefit of each other. Blot out the capitalist who uses his abilities to employ labor, even if done for his own advantage, shut down your mills, harbor your ships; shut off your steam, stall the iron horse and stop all the wheels of business which require combined wealth to set in motion, and what would be the result to the world? It only proves that their interests are identical. The one needs the money, the other the labor; neither can live and prosper without the other, and they should work and live for each other's interests and each be protected by equitable laws. Who are the millionaires of our land that they should be held up as enemies of the poor and a reproach to all peoples?

Nine-tenths of them spring from the ranks of the workers of honest toil. Some were town paupers, and stepped from the poor house into the world's arena, and worked up from rags and heroes to the possession of millions and in rebel palaces. The poor man of to-day may be the rich man of to-morrow, and the rich man of to-day is cursed or envied to-day may be the poor man to-morrow.

The possibilities of the poor man, the possibilities of the young man who has no money to pave his way, no legacy but his manhood, his health and his intellect, and the brain and muscle his Maker gave him, are beyond measure greater in this magnificent country of ours than in any other and under the broad canopy of heaven.

It is the glory of our great and glorious republic that the road to fame and honor and riches is open to him. No political trigger can be his way, and no political margent have his course, go where, he hopes him, but which industry, perseverance and energy can surmount. The man who to-day earned their successful fame and would tear down the great and glorious fabric which saves and protects his may, in his turn, be the target for the shafts of calumny, envy and hate.

The United States coast survey informs us that Maine has a shore line of over three thousand miles; that her sea coast line is two hundred and twenty miles in extent. No other Atlantic state possesses such wonderful scenery of mountain, rugged and picturesque coast combined. And what is better, her waterfalls, at the entrance of her harbors and rivers are broad and deep, and open to the world, inviting all to enter and enjoy the opulence, security of unlimited health and diversified comfort, which no other Atlantic state can present. "With a summer climate unsurpassed in its pure bracing, health-restoring and life-building air," where malaria is unknown and where severe forms of contagious and infectious diseases are never met except as the result of gross ignorance or neglect.

Agriculture in Maine is on the increase. The present census will show that her farmers as a class have been prosperous. Returns from the largest county in the State, a county as large as one of the states themselves, show that the farms and farmers are in a remarkably prosperous condition, while throughout the whole country it is well known that farming is in a somewhat depressed condition. The population too, has increased in that county. The Hon. Samuel W. Mathews, the able commissioner of industrial and labor statistics of Maine, writes in reply to a letter addressed him the present month:

"My individual returns will show a remarkably prosperous condition of things among the farmers. The census of 1880 will show a large increase in population, in valuation, and in the number of farms in that county. * * * An inspection of exhibit is made to the five hundred returns received by me from individual farmers, in this, that 89 per cent. show an increased productiveness in farms throughout the State, showing increased intelligence, economy and good management. * * * The next census (1890) will show a marked increase in the number of farms in the State." He adds that the general facts he gives are verified from returns from farmers and assessors of towns.

There are now forty starch factories in Aroostook county, which last year consumed over 2,000,000 bushels of potatoes. Besides these 1,500,000 bushels were shipped and marketed. Add to these 500,000 bushels more for home consumption and kept for feed and we find that that single county raised last year (1889) over 4,000,000 bushels of potatoes, and received for what she shipped $1,300,000 in cash, and the present year she has one-third more acreage in potatoes than last. One farmer last year from his farm of eleven acres of potatoes, realized net $1,000 over and above all expenses, by taking the interest on the value of his land, and many farmers in 1889 cleared $1,000 or over from their potato crop alone.

It is true, and we do not conceal the fact, that there has been in the past a large emigration from New England and especially from Maine; that the census of 1880 shows that 183,837 of her native born population have gone to swell the population, and increase the wealth and intelligence of all the states and territories in the west. Who are the sons and daughters of Maine and New England who have left the homes of their youth to seek their fortunes in the great West, and in every section of this country? They are among your most distinguished statesmen. They have filled the highest offices in the gift of your states. They are among your leading writers, eminent jurists, dispensers of just law to your people. They fill your pulpits, and prominent and prominent of your colleges. They help form the groups and foundations of your best institutions. They are supporters of religion, morality and virtue.

They believe in independence and conscience, and lend their influence on the side of virtue and morality. They believe in equal and equal justice to every citizen. Their voices and their arms are raised at all times to put down anarchy, that hellborn product of Europe, and all its bloody crimes and vices, and to suppress everything that makes a blow against our glorious institutions, which are the envy of our Western.

Brought something this morning to mind from the very vitals of New England, and from Maine, they both continue to increase in population and wealth. Maine's valuation has increased $95,000,000 in the past decade. Her bank deposits have increased $20,000,000.

Her industries and wealth have increased in a far greater ratio. Her population too, too, increased. Her farmers and other farms have increased.

While the sons and daughters of New England have in the past been instrumental in founding new states and territories, she will yet in the future have a duty to perform if she means to build up other states and territories as she has done in the past, and leave at home wealth and population. "Shall not thereof some could bring riches the self of the man?"

I can give in any that the city has done so. This, not denied, will indicate to show a far greater increase in population, as well as in all material growth in the State of Maine.

We have not intended to draw invidious comparisons between the East and West or between any section of our common country.

We yield pre-eminence to the great West in her marvelous growth. We bow in admiration and great reverence to her wonderful grains fields, waving with a golden harvest, and which traverse her rich prairies farther than the eye can reach.

But the West cannot wholly be independent of the East. The East taps her vast granaries and draws from them the daily bread, the most necessary produce, to help feed the hungry multitudes of artisans and wage-workers who swarm her living mines of industries, while the east in return takes from the Rich the thousand and one articles of commerce which she needs, and does not or cannot produce.

The South, too, sends to the East a portion of her cotton, sugar, rice and other crops which she raises in excess of her own consumption, and which cannot be grown in the East, receiving in exchange many commodities and luxuries brought or produced there. But not content with this she is striving to build up vast streams of capital from the willing East to develop her long-slumbering resources.

The interests of all states and sections are identical, so far as go to make up a great people. It matters not as which gets the balance in strength, the debit and credit are for the mutual advancement and benefit of all, and all are one.

You have gathered here from all parts of this wide-extended country for what purpose? Is it not to take wise counsel together to form a united chain which extends through every state and territory that you may be strong and not to consider? And is it not one of your principal aims to see that your rulers enact wise and beneficent laws favorable to the vast and powerful constituency which you represent.

Whether Democrat or Republican, whatever our politics, creed or faith, we should unite to labor for and protect the diversified interests of all industries that affect the prosperity and interest of agriculture in all its branches, and especially, that will protect and throw safeguards around the direct products of the farmer and save him from the dire results of foreign competition, so far as it may be done without great detriment, or wrong to any section, or to any important American industry.

This great galaxy of states, powerful in its unity, revolves around one central head from which they all radiate, and from which they derive their strength and hopes and life. United, no power on the face of the earth can sever one member of this great body politic. Dismembered, and we fall a prey to anarchy and discord, and lose the respect of the nations.

The government is the heart of this republic, the States and territories are the arteries and blood vessels. From its pulsations flow the streams of life which are necessary to preserve and strengthen and give vitality to every member. If the most remote State in the south freezes, Maine will feel the hurt and pulsate in sympathy. Let Texas be invaded by a hostile foe, and Maine will leap as one man to her defense. By so doing she only protects part of herself, bone of her bone and flesh of her flesh.

We in the East believe in one solid government—one great and glorious country. We believe that the flag that floats over the capitol at Washington is the flag of the South and of the North, of the East and of the West—that its glorious folds are unfolded to protect all alike—every American citizen, wherever he may be, on every sea and in every clime, that it is the emblem of our nation's greatness, power, majesty and power—the type of freedom and of a united people.
